

Every Year the Salmon Come Back

Robert Davidson – Clip 7

That came from the same experience of hosting the two-day Every Year the Salmon Come Back feast. I did the painting very close to that feast time, to express my feelings about the return of the sockeye salmon. It was my way of giving thanks to the salmon for their return. I was continually amazed at the salmon's drive to come back and to lay their eggs and to die and so I was really in awe of that experience. When the salmon come back they turn red and so you'll see on the bottom red salmon and from death comes new life and the two salmon jumping is the new life.
